Sibu, the capital city of Sibu Division, sits on the point where the Rejang River splits into two, the Rejang proper and the Igan Rivers. And it is this riverine charm and its exceptionally energetic, cheerful and hospitable people that more than make up for whatever geographical shortcomings Sibu has.

All roads in Kapit lead to the timber camps. What is both amusing and amazing about this Kapit Division Administrative Centre is that for a town that has just about 20 kilometres of road, Kapit probably has the highest numbers of cars per kilometre of road. Kapit lives and breathes timber its position midpoint on the all-important Rajang River between Sibu and Belaga is a great asset to this town of 4,000 people. Day and night, express taxi boats dart their way up and down river, ferrying passengers and cargo to Sibu or Belaga.

Belaga comprises one street of shops selling anything from handicraft to household goods. "Kedais" or restaurants here serve delicious seafood, particularly fresh fish just caught from the Rejang River. Belaga is a pretty little village and the river provides a gentle backdrop to this sleepy settlement. Sited on the lower end of the Rajang where it flows into the Balui, Belega acts as a trading centre for most of the people from the Tinjar and Balui rivers.

* Suggest to take morning flight to Sibu.
